When the Brennens arrived in Germany, they were shocked by the changes that had taken place in the country since they had left. The Nazis had come to power in 1933, and they were quickly transforming Germany into a totalitarian state. Hildegard and her family witnessed the persecution of Jews, the suppression of dissent, and the militarization of the country.

In 1939, World War II broke out. Hildegard was 20 years old at the time, and she was forced to work in a factory that produced munitions for the German army. She saw firsthand the horrors of war, and she lost many friends and family members in the conflict.

In 1945, the war ended, and Germany was defeated. Hildegard and her family were left homeless and destitute. They eventually made their way back to the United States, where they started a new life.

In 1995, Hildegard Brenner published her memoir, An American Girl in Hitler Germany. The book is a powerful and moving account of her experiences during the Nazi era. Brenner's firsthand account of life in Nazi Germany is a valuable historical document, and it is a reminder of the horrors of war and the resilience of the human spirit.
