The village of Beaucourt was one of the key objectives of the British army during the Battle of the Somme. The village was located on a ridge overlooking the Somme River. The British believed that if they could capture Beaucourt, they would be able to break through the German lines and advance on the town of Albert.

The British launched several attacks on Beaucourt, but they were all repulsed by the Germans. The Germans had built a strong defensive system around the village, and they were determined to hold it at all costs.

The British eventually captured Beaucourt on November 13, 1916. The capture of Beaucourt was a major victory for the British, but it came at a high cost. The British lost over 20,000 men in the battle for the village.

The Battle of the Somme

The Battle of the Somme was one of the bloodiest battles of World War I. Over 1 million casualties were suffered by both sides. The battle was a stalemate, with neither side able to achieve a decisive victory.

The battle began on July 1, 1916, with a massive British artillery barrage. The British hoped to break through the German lines and advance on the town of Albert. However, the German defenses were strong, and the British were unable to make any significant progress.

The Germans launched a series of counterattacks in an attempt to drive the British back. The British were able to hold their ground, but they suffered heavy losses.

The battle raged on for months, with neither side able to gain an advantage. The British eventually captured Beaucourt on November 13, 1916, but it was a costly victory.
