What is Dead Reckoning?

Dead reckoning is a navigation technique that uses known information about the speed and direction of travel to estimate the current position of a moving object. This technique is often used by sailors, pilots, and hikers to navigate without the use of GPS or other electronic devices.

Dead reckoning can be a useful navigation technique, but it is important to remember that it is not always accurate. Errors in speed or direction can lead to significant errors in the estimated position. It is therefore important to use dead reckoning in conjunction with other navigation techniques, such as GPS or map and compass.
