On a cold January morning, Stephanie Tyler's husband, David, was killed in a car accident. Their world was shattered in an instant. Stephanie was left alone to pick up the pieces and navigate the uncharted territory of widowhood.

In No Hurry to Get Home, Stephanie shares her raw and honest account of the months and years that followed. She writes about the suffocating grief, the sleepless nights, and the overwhelming sense of loneliness. But she also writes about the unexpected moments of hope and healing that began to emerge.

Stephanie found solace in nature, in the company of friends and family, and in her own writing. She learned to appreciate the beauty of the present moment, even in the midst of her pain. And she discovered that it's possible to find healing and redemption even after the most profound loss.
