Kevin's Early Life

Kevin McAleer was born in San Diego, California, in 1989. He was born with a rare genetic disorder called spinal muscular atrophy

(SMA). SMA is a progressive disease that affects the muscles and nerves. It can cause muscle weakness, difficulty breathing, and other health problems.

Kevin's parents were told that he would never be able to walk or surf. But they refused to give up on him. They enrolled him in physical therapy and other therapies to help him build strength and mobility. Kevin also started surfing at a young age. Surfing helped him to build strength and coordination. It also gave him a sense of freedom and independence.

Kevin's Surfing Career

Kevin Mcaleer started surfing at a young age. He quickly showed a natural talent for the sport. He was able to surf waves that were much bigger than other surfers his age. Kevin also had a unique style of surfing. He was known for his aggressive approach and his ability to catch waves that other surfers would miss.

Kevin's surfing career took off in 2005 when he won the National Scholastic Surfing Association (NSSA) Open Men's Division. This win earned him a spot on the U.S. Surfing Team. Kevin went on to compete in the World Surfing Championships in 2006 and 2007. He also won the U.S. Open of Surfing in 2008.

Kevin's surfing career was cut short in 2009 when he was diagnosed with a rare form of cancer. He underwent surgery and chemotherapy, but the cancer returned in 2011. Kevin died in 2012 at the age of 22.

Kevin's Legacy

Kevin McAleer was an inspiration to everyone who knew him. He showed that anything is possible if you never give up on your dreams. Kevin's story is a reminder that we should never underestimate the power of the human spirit.

Kevin's legacy lives on through the Kevin McAleer Foundation. The foundation provides support for children with disabilities. The foundation also helps to promote surfing as a sport for people with disabilities.
